The purpose of this study was to analyze cultural differences in intercultural communication between China and Thailand, using a corpus analysis method to compare and explain these differences, and to provide strategies for Chinese and Thai workers and learners to cope with cultural differences.

By classifying 65 cases of cultural differences between China and Thailand collected from the "Case Database of China-Foreign Cultural Differences," the results from the analysis showed that the most prevalent type of cultural difference in intercultural communication between China and Thailand is related to idea-thinking, while the artifact was the least type of cultural difference.

Through investigating the cultural differences in intercultural communication between China and Thailand, the author explains the causes of these differences, which are attributed to geographical factors, cultural factors, and social-historical factors. Based on the causes of cultural differences, the author proposes solutions for dealing with differences in artifacts, institutional culture, behavioral culture, and mentality culture.
